

Ordination & Installation Process

In Southern Baptist Convention (SBC) life, churches — not associations, nor state conventions, nor the denomination — ordain and install men called by God to the gospel ministry and/or the office of deacon or elder. Similarly, SBC churches sometimes “commission” men and women to missions and ministry roles.

Ordaining a candidate sets them apart as a minister of the gospel in general, and is typically done by the candidate's home church. Installing a pastor occurs at a host church when they are calling someone to pastor in their own church. Sometimes a church will do both. Whatever the case, it is the church's privilege and responsibility to authenticate God's call of the candidate as a focused and faithful representative of God Himself. Regarding ordination, the first step will be to assemble an Ordination Council.

Ordination Council.

- 1 The pastor or church invites a candidate for ordination to be interviewed by their local Director of Missions, ordained ministers and/or deacons from churches in the area that the pastor has invited.
- 2 They will interview the candidate regarding his conversion, call to ministry, personal growth, theological views, vision for ministry, etc. (See attached sample questionnaire)
- 3 Following the Q & A's, the candidate leaves the room for the council to vote their approval or not, and call the candidate back in to share the result. If positive, plans are made and a date set for a Ordination Service as a pastor in general, and/or an Installation Service as this local church pastor.
